In Washington County

Farm tour set

The fifth annual Virginia Farm Management Tour in Washington County will be Saturday, August 15. It is open to the public.

The tour, sponsored by the Virginia Cooperative Extension Service in cooperation with Washington County agricultural leaders, is expected to attract over 3,000 people to view the management practices on six of the best-managed farms in the county.

County Extension agent Joe W. Deering said this year's tour has two main goals in mind - to make the farming community more aware of good farm management practices and to educate the non-farming public to some of the excellent farms located in Southwest Virginia.

The tour is self-directed and self-scheduled. All tour farms will be open for visitors from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Chosen to be featured on this year's tour is Highland Dairy, Green Valley Pultry Farm, Cole Nurseries, Woodsview Farm, the fifth-ranked dairy in the state of Virginia; Paramont Ranch, an Arabian horse and purebred Charolais, registered Angus and Hereford cattle operation; and the Frank White farm, a diversified business consisting of sheep, burley tobacco and beef cattle.

Lunch will be served at three farms from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. A lamb barbecue will be served at Cole Nurseries (Stop 6); a chicken barbecue at the Highland Dairy (Stop 1); and barbecue beef and lamb at Paramont Ranch (Stop 3). Proceeds from food sales will be donated to the Washington County Fairgrounds Association., Abingdon.

On tour day, information centers will be located just off Interstate 81 at exits 5, 8 and 12. Information, including state and county maps, and a special farm tour tabloid from the Bristol Herald-Courier, will be distributed at each information center.

Tour routes will be well marked with orange and black signs. Questions should be directed to tour aides who will be wearing specially-designed green caps imprinted with the Farm Management Tour logo.

Washington County is an historic, yet progressive county. The quaint and elegant charm of an area over 200 years old is preserved, while a successful campaign to attract small business and industry is underway.

Abingdon, the county seat and one of the oldest towns in Virginia, has long been looked upon as a town of culture, a seat of higher education, with delightful climate, scenic countryside and colonial charm and grace.

Washington County is ideally situated in a fertile valley between the Blue Ridge and Appalachian Mountains. The county's 571 square miles are easily accessible by interstate and state highways.

Washington County succeeds Hanover, Southampton, Rockingham and Culpeper counties as host for the statewide farm tour.

Visitors to the farm tour also will be able to attend the Virginia Highlands Festival in progress August 1-16 in Abingdon and enjoy the excitement of live professional theatre at the world-famous Barter Theatre.

For more information on lodging facilities, farm tour details, the Highlands Festival or Barter Theatre, contact the Washington County Extension Office ab Abingdon (703) 628-2161 or 628-2161 or your local Extension office.

Dean A. Komm, based at Tech's Southern Piedmont Research Center, said an alert is given when reports of blue mold have been confirmed in Virginia and weather conditions are favorable for new infections.

Extension tobacco specialist, Leo A. Link, has reported finding the leaf lesion phase of blue mold in one-half acre of burley tobacco in Lee County. "The leaf lesions had caused an estimated 10-40 percent loss to the lower leaves," Link said. "The lesions are actively sporulating and the disease has been present for about two weeks."

To date, blue mold has not been reported on any farm where Ridomil was used. Virginia Tech specialists estimate that approximate 80 percent of field grown burley tobacco was treated with Ridomil 2E as preplant incorporated treatment.

There has also been an additional report of blue mold leaf lesion on flue-cured tobacco in Charlotte County. The disease was confined to a few plants and the lesions were actively sporulating. Ridomil was used twice in the plant bed, but was not used in the field.

In sun-cured tobacco, blue mold has been reported from one field in Goochland County.

"Although a few scattered cases of blue mold have occurred in flue-cured, sun-cured and dark-fired tobacco, weather conditions are not favorable for the spread of the disease," Komm stated. "There is no need at this time to treat fields not already treated with Ridomil 2E."

Komm warned, however, that tobacco producers should continue to examine fields for blue mold and report findings to a local office of the Virginia Cooperative Extension Service.

In burley tobacco in Southwest Virginia, present weather conditions are favorable for new infections. If Ridomil has not been used, Komm urged Southwest Tobacco producers to apply a protective fungicide on a regular basis until the alert has been lifted.

Pests can be eliminated

Fighting termites

Nothing, with the possible exception of a fire or natural catastrophe, strikes fear into the heart of a homeowner more than discovering a termite infestation in a house.

Fred M. Lamb, Virginia Tech Extension specialist in wood products, said concern is justified but that the homeowner shouldn't panic. The situation should be evaluated and then the proper steps should be taken.

Even a mature, well-established colony of 60,000 termites will eat only a fifth of an ounce of wood a day. So there is time to consider the proper steps to eliminate the pests.

The College of Agriculture and Life Sciences faculty member noted that termites' main diet is wood cellulose. They thrive on smoothly planed lumber and other manufactured wood and paper products in the home.

Subterranean termites, the critter which is found in all sections of Virginia, thrives on warm air and moist conditions. To stay moist, they must maintain a direct link with the ground unless leaking pipes or roof provide them with a nice wet home.

It's best not to worry about termites already in the wood, Lamb said. Cut off their access to moisture and the termites will die.

The termites have a one-two punch. As they eat their way through wood, the structural fiber is weakened. However, they cause more damage than this.

They bring moist soil with them to build protective tubes and tunnels and this leads to attack by wood fungi. Subterranean termite damage almost always is accompanied by wood decay, which weakens the wood further.

Lamb noted there are 15 areas which offer invitations to termites. They are:

--Cracks in concrete foundations allow termites hidden access from soil to sill.

--Posts set in concrete may give a false sense of security. What if they are in contact with the soil underneath.

--Concrete porches with earthfill underneath pose a special hazard. Often, wood framing members are in contact with the fill.

--Form boards left in place contribute to termite food supply.

--Leaking pipes and dripping faucets keep the soil moist. Excess irrigation has the same effect. Down spouts should carry water away from the building.

--Shrubbery which blocks the air flow through vents causes the air underneath the house to remain warm and moist, an ideal climate for termites.

--Debris under house supports termite colony until population becomes large enough to attack house itself.

--Foundation walls or footings which are too low, permit wood to contact the soil.

--Stucco or brick veneer carried down over concrete foundation permits hidden entrance between exterion and foundation, if bond fails.

--Planters built against the foundation allow direct access to unprotected veneer, siding or cracked stucco.

--Forms left in hole of slab where bathtub drain enters building provide a direct route to inner walls.

--Porch steps in contact with untreated soil literally offers termites a stairway to a house.

--Heating unit accelerates termite development by maintaining warm soil for colony on a year-round basis.

--Paper made of wood. Don't leave paper collars around pipes.

--In a house that once was termite free, do-it-yourselfers can provide access for termites by building trellises and other adornments which provide a direct link from soil to wood.
